

August 26, 1914

Daniel Nyström, Editor
J.O. Stromquist, Manager

“To think freely is big, to think correctly is bigger.”

Many of our readers follow the news about the war in newspapers and magazines.

But many find it hard to understand the situation, since they do not know the area. Posten offers the readers a chance to receive an excellent map of Europe, especially made to explain the war zone. The map is in color and very clear. The detailed information on the back of the map will also be of great help to be able to understand the situation. Further information in the ad in this issue.

A new question that may cause conflict is to decide who will be the chief in command of the allied troops. The campaign is said to be French; it is taken place on Belgian land; but based on rank the English officer is said to have the advantage. The name of the English officer is French, and that may help in this situation. The French will be represented through the name and the English by the person.